When a work is to be entrusted to a person, he who achieves much other supplementary work without any conflict with the first-said work, alone deserves to be entrusted with that work.

The adjunct causes for the accomplishment even of a minor action are not one and he who understands the work in all its aspects alone is competent to accomplish that work. (K. V. Sarma).

AUTHORS AND SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL VERSES

In the following pages, the authors and sources of the individual verses included in Vol. V are documented. The minimum necessary information about the authors and sources are also provided. Where, however, such information has already been given in Vols. I to IV, only references thereto have been given. Details about works are generally given under their authors along with the personal details of each author. To this, is added a reference from A descriptive catalogue of poets quoted in Sanskrit anthologies and inscriptions (DCA) by Ludwik Sternbach (Otto Harrassowitz, Wiesbaden, 2 vols., 1978, 1979), where details of anthological and inscriptional poets have been fully documented and efforts made to identify these authors and to distinguish them from their namesakes.

At the end of each source are given the serial numbers of the verses extracted in the present volume, being Nos. 8265-9979. The abbreviations used for the several authors and texts (vide 'Abbreviations' in vols. I-V) are given in italics, within brackets, following the relevent sources. While verse numbers given as such refer to the sources from which the verses are directly extracted, verse numbers given within brackets refer to sources which are known indirectly.

FOREWORD

I feel very great pleasure and consider it a veritable privilege to contribute a Foreword to this Volume of the Maha-Subhaṣita-Saṁgraha, planned and partly compiled by the late Professor Ludwik Sternbach and being so ably edited and presented to the world of the learned by Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair, Director-Professor of the V. V. R. I., Hoshiarpur. It is a matter of delight for me to be fortunate to witness the fructification of a proposal mooted by the learned Professor Sternbach and discussed with me as far back as September, 1966. He was then in search of a scholar who would translate into English those subhaṣitas which had not so far been translated into English, edit the Sanskrit text critically and see the work through the press. He had himself found such a scholar in Prof. Bhaskaran Nair. On his way to New York, he communicated his wish to me in his letter dated 24. 9. 1966 as follows : "I would greatly appreciate it if he (Mr. Bhaskaran Nair) would be able and willing to undertake the job, since I have full confidence in him and have high esteem for his work."

Needless to say that it was beyond my power to request and persuade the late lamented Acharya Vishva Bandhu Ji to spare Mr. Bhaskaran for this work and six long years passed. On 28th August, 1972, Prof. Sternbach again wrote to the late Acharya Ji that the Mahā-Subhaṣita-Saṁgraha was for him like a child and he intended to bequeath the whole of his fortune after his and his mother's death to the Institute which will take up the publication of this work. Thus Prof. Sternbach succeeded in persuading the late Acharya Ji to agree to the publication of this great Project by the V. V. R. I. In this way, Prof. Sternbach's ardent wish to entrust the editing and the preparation of the final text and its publication to Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair was ultimately fulfilled.

Prof. Bhaskaran has spared no pains to make the work a model of critical editing and excellent referencing. Besides vetting and touching up, as necessary, the translations of the various scholars included in this Volume, he himself has translated a substantial number of stanzas. He has more than fulfilled the cherished wishes of Prof. Sternbach who was pleased to place on record his discerning appreciation of Prof. Bhaskaran's work in the Acknowledgements prefixed to the Second Volume in the following words : "My most whole-hearted thanks and words of appreciation go to Shri S. Bhaskaran Nair, who edited the present Volume to my entire satisfaction. He has carefully gone through the whole work, and has been making extra-corrections and additions with regard to the Sanskrit text, Notes, Metre, Translation and Indices. He has also made numerous scholarly suggestions which were always useful. I wish to place on record my never-to-be-forgotten gratitude to Shri Nair."

In the present Volume there are 1589 verses culled from over 800 Sanskrit works. Their text has been critically edited and a complete bibliographical and text-comparative data has been furnished. In the case of doubtful text of verses, very intelligent textual emendations have been made. Besides a lucid English translation, a detailed investigation into the complicacies of metre has been gone into and additional information, wherever necessary, has been supplied in the form of foot-notes.

There are two very useful appendices. In the first of these the editor has given a consolidated list of Abbreviations including in it the Abbreviations already given in Volumes I to IV. This not only makes the list complete and this Volume self-sufficient, but also makes the task of referencing easier and it also serves the purpose of a Bibliography. In the second appendix, the names of the authors and the sources of the verses included in the present Volume VI have been documented. The minimum requisite information about the authors, and source-works has also been provided. For further information regarding the relevant authors and sources, necessary references have been made to the two volumes of Prof. Sternbach's A Descriptive Catalogue of Poets quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions, published during 1978-80 from Wiesbaden, where details of anthological and inscriptional poets have been fully recorded; and also to Aufrecht's Catalogus Catalogorum as well as to New Catalogus Catalogorum by Prof. V. Raghavan and Prof. K.K. Raja, published, in several volumes, by the Madras University. There is a classified Index of Metres and also an exhaustive Subject Index which further enhance the reference-value of the work as a source-book of information on a variety of subjects connected with important aspects of men and matters. Prof. Nair's meticulous textual-criticism, his command of English and the copious referencing have gone into the making of this Volume a fine literary achievement, worthy of the author—Prof. Sternbach as well as of the V. V. R. Institute under the auspices of which it is being published.

The volumes already published under Prof. Bhaskaran's masterly editorship have elicited unequivocal praise from eminent Indologists like Prof. J. Gonda of Utrecht, Prof. Pratap Bandyopadhyaya of Burdwan, Prof. P. K. Narayana Pillai, former Dean of Oriental Studies of the University of Kerala, and Dr. B. N. Shukla, former Vice-Chancellor of Sampurnanand Sanskrit University, Varanasi, I express my deep appreciation of the excellence of the high literary standard maintained by Prof. Bhaskaran in bringing out these volumes of the Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha and I must offer to him my heartiest congratulations on his fine performance.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

On the occasion of the publication of Volume VI of the Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha through our well-known Vishveshvaranand Indological Series as its No. 80, it is my sacred duty to remember reverently the late Acharya Dr. Vishva Bandhu and the late Dr. Ludwik Sternbach, the Founder-Director and the Prime Benefactor of the Institute, respectively. While the former, as desired by the latter, had entrusted the onerous task of editing the Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha to the undersigned, the latter had expressed his entire satisfaction at the careful editing, scholarly presentation and impressive appearance of the first four volumes which had been issued by the Institute, during his life-time.

Dr. Sternbach had planned the long-range Project of Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha in 20 volumes and completed, before his sad demise on 25. 3. 1981, the compilation and enumeration of textual verses numbering up to 10579 which occurs on page 2804 of the present Volume and also had partly collected the material which can be advantageously utilized in the preparation of further three to four volumes. This is the reason that in his A Descriptive Catalogue of Poets quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions (DCA), the Sanskrit verses included in the Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha (SMS) are mentioned in their serial numbers only up to 10579. (See DCA, Vol. 1, under no. 477, p. 334, line 15 : "SMS 10579=Sudhālaharī 8").

Though Acharya Dr. Vishva Bandhu could not see the publication of any of the SMS volume, Dr. Sternbach had the good fortune of seeing the first four volumes of his projected work. He was so much satisfied by the progress of his Project at the Institute that he, as promised by him through his letter addressed to Acharya Dr. Vishva Bandhu and sent from Paris on 28th August, 1972, bequeathed his entire fortune, with the exception of a few legacies, to the Institute. By this magnanimous deed so devotedly executed by him, he became the Prime Benefactor of the Institute.

I am much beholden to Prof. Veda Vyasa, the President of the V. V. R. I. Society, for taking sustained interest in the affairs of the Institute in general and in the progress of the SMS Project in particular.

There can be no person more fitted to introduce this Volume to the world of scholars than Prof. Jagannath Agrawal, the former Head of the Sanskrit Department, Panjab University, Chandigarh and presently the Senior Vice-President of the Institute Society, for he had come into contact with the late Dr. Sternbach as back as in 1954, when he, in his capacity as the Joint Editor of the Dr. Lakshman Sarup Memorial Volume entitled Sarūpa-Bhāratī or The Homage of Indology, had received from Dr. Sternbach a research paper entitled "Juridical Studies in Ancient Indian Law—Legal, Fiscal, Social and Penal Privileges accorded to Infants etc." and, later on, in 1966, when Dr. Sternbach visited the Institute, he had discussed with Professor Agrawal his SMS Project, in detail. I am, therefore, extremely thankful to him for having graced the Volume with his informative Foreword.

Likewise, my thanks are due, in full measure, to Dr. K. V. Sarma, Ex. Director-Professor, V.V.B.I.S. & I.S., Panjab University, Hoshiarpur and the late Prof. A. A. Ramanathan of Madras, who translated into English a large number of Sanskrit verses for this Volume and also to all those learned scholars whose translations of the respective verses are included in the Volume with due mention of their names at the end of their respective translations, within brackets.

And finally, in placing the Volume before the scholarly public, I must also thank Dr. Parveen Singh Rana, the young and energetic Research Assistant at the Institute, for assisting me in the arduous task of preparing various indices appended to the Volume and also in seeing the entire work through the press.

Is it that edible roots have all disappeared from the caves of mountains, or springs have ceased to flow from rocky slopes, or trees have stopped to grow their fruitful and barky branches, that we are thus forced to look up to the face of those proud and perverse persons whose brows are ever dancing with the vain conceit of the small quantity of wealth which they have barely succeeded to accumulate after a series of difficulties and troubles ? Why has your face become red in anger and rough with the wave of frown, and your lips are affected with heated breath, and why do you refuse to speak to one who loves a friend and is (now) present ? Oh lady conscious of a woman's pride in personal charms, you play an enemy to your own self. Oh jealous woman, give up your anger of wounded vanity. When too much stretched, everything quickly breaks. (M. Ghosh).

Courtier : Ah, why should fear transform your tenderness ? / Why should the dainty feet feel such distress, / that twinkle in the dance so prettily ? / Why should your eyes, thus startled into fear,/ dart sidelong looks ? Why, like the timid deer / before pursuing hunters, should you flee ?[1] (No. 10173).

1. This and the following verses up to No. 10184 form the words of Śakāra, the king's brother-in-law, Ceṭa, his servant and Viṭa, his courtier as the three chase the courtezan Vasantasenā who was fleeing to escape from their clutches.

Śakāra : Why flee ? and run ? and stumble in your turning ? / Be kind ! you shall not die. Oh, stop your feet !/ With love, sweet girl, my tortured heart is burning, / as on a heap of coals a piece of meat. (No. 10174).

Servant : In fear you flee / away from me / as a summer peahen should ; / but my lord and master / struts fast and faster, / like a woodcock in the wood. (No. 10175).

Courtier : Why should you tremble, should you flee, / a-quiver like the plantain tree ? / Your garment's border, red and fair, / is all a-shiver in the air ; / now and again, a lotus-bud / falls to the ground, as red as blood. / A red realgar[1] vain you seem, / whence, smitten, drops of crimson stream. (No. 10176).

1. Realgar : Red arsenic, used as a cosmetic.

Śakāra : You wake my passion, my desire, my love ; / you drive away my sleep in bed at night ; / both fear and terror seem your heart to move ; / you trip and stumble in your headlong flight. / But Rāvaṇa forced Kuntī to his will ; / just so shall I enjoy you to the fill. (No. 10177).

Courtier : Why should your fleeter flight / outstrip my flying feet ? / Why like a snake in fright / before the bird-king's might, / thus seek to flee, my sweet ? / Could I not catch the storm-wind in his flight ? / Yet would not seize upon you, though I might. (No. 10178).

Śakāra : This whip of robber love, this dancing-girl, / eater of fish, destroyer of her kin, / this snubnose, stubborn love-box, courtezan, / this clothes-line, wanton creature, maid of sin— / I gave her ten sweet names, and still / she will not bend her to my will. (No. 10179).

Courtier : As courtier's fingers strike the lute's tense string, / the dancing ear-ring smites your wounded cheek. / Why should you flee, with dreadful terror weak, / as flees the crane when heaven's thunders ring ? (No. 10180).

Śakāra : Your jingling gems, girl, clink like anything ; / like Draupadī you flee, when Rāma kissed her. / I'll seize you quick, as once the monkey-king / seized Subhadrā, Viśvāvasu's sweet sister. (No. 10181).

Servant : He's the royal protégé ; / do whatever he may say, / and you shall have good fish and flesh to eat. / For when dogs have all the fish / and the flesh that they can wish, / even carrion seems to them no longer sweet. (No. 10182).

Courtier : The girdle dropping low upon your hips / flashes as brilliant as the shining stars ; / the wondrous terror of your fleeing mars / your charms ; for red realgar, loosened, slips / as on an imaged god, from cheek and lips. (No. 10183).

Śakāra : We're chasing you with all our main and might, / as dogs a jackal when they hunt and find it ; / but you are quick and nimble in your flight, / and steal my heart with all the roots that bind it. (No. 10184). (A. W. Ryder).

What advantage is there in studying the Veda-s, the Smṛti-s, the Purāṇa-s and the numerous Śāstra-s; or in performing various sacrificial rites and ceremonies whose only fruit is to secure for man a small residence in the village of heaven? Excepting the attainment of that spiritual knowledge of the Self which is the one great source of all contentment and happiness and the sole deadly fire for the destruction of worldly anxieties and cares, all other pursuits are nothing more than mere mercenary crafts. Is this befitting to your purity, this putting to shame the eminence of your feathers ? Is this proper to your well-sharpened edge or to your close association with the bowstring, that going up to the ear of one for a moment you pierce the person in front of you cruelly from afar, O wicked arrow ?

Or

[ Is this proper, you villain (carrying tales), to the truth, this trouble to the rise of your own side ? Is it befitting to the final result or to the attachment to virtue that, getting to the proximity to the ear of one (king) for a moment (and whispering tales) you cause cruelly the ruin of one standing before you ? ] (A. She[1] has fallen into the net of the god (of love), the slight one ! Her harmonious body shakes in agony ! Her fixed regard is lost in emptiness ! She is like a silverfish flapping in a wicker snare !

She stiffens and trembles and the small hairs of her body stand on end ! Her sighs put her sweat into condition ; for the god with the uneven number of darts[2] has so commanded it. With so exceptional a beauty, ah, well he knows his game.

Her very pain dowers her with sweetest attractions, for her deep sighs move her breasts enticingly. Her sincere passion adds the enchantment of tenderness to her glances ; her hidden inclination gives her face new brightness ; the charm of trembling words and uncertain walking comes from her trouble.

But although her beloved was near her side, and although the sharp arrows of Kāma rained about her like hail, she dared not speak of the new thing which grasped her heart, for fear of killing it. (E. Powys Mathers).

Some long for its root, others for its boughs, others take to its shelter, others seek for its fore-parts, others pluck off its leaves. Others carry its flowers in their hands, others too are satisfied with its fragrance alone. It is but a pity that of the creeper in the form of speech, the ignorant dare not even see the fruit.[1] (J. Shastri).

1. L. H. Gray translates this verse:
Some (have their) hopes <confused at the root>; some again, (are) <sharing connection with the trunk>; some (have) <reached the shade; others <bring shoots up to the fore-foot (of the tree)>; others carry <flowers> in (their) hand; then others (are) a vessel <simply of perfume>; ([for] some [have their] hopes <occupied with the Primal cause>; some, again [are] <devoted to the relations of the Skandha [metre]>; Some [have] <attained to beauty [of diction]>; others <raise up strength to exalted verse>; others carry <gallantry> in [their] hand; then others [are] a vessel of the <connection> of words [with one another]>); but fools, alas, cannot perceive the fruit of the tendril of speech!

(d) °रारामे न या° SkV; °रारामेनयन्त्युत्कुतां (sic !) SkV (var.); (D. H. H. Ingalls's suggestion in his Notes [p. 548] as above).

Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre.

When villages are left by all but a few families / wasting under undeserved disaster / from a cruel district lord / but still clinging to ancestral lands, / villages without grass, where walls are crumbling / and the mongoose wanders through the lanes ; / they yet show their deepest sadness / in a garden filled with the cooing of gray doves. (D. H. H. Ingalls).

ABBREVIATIONS-CUM-BIBLIOGRAPHY

Note : While Volume I of the Mahā-subhāṣita-saṁgraha includes the main list of Abbreviations used in the Project, three lists of additional Abbreviations are prefixed to Volumes II, III and IV. Even then there are some omissions. Therefore, with a view to making the Abbreviations complete, the reference easier and also the Volume self-sufficient, a consolidated list of the same, in its complete form, is appended hereto, which may serve the purpose of Bibliography as well.

INDEX OF AUTHORS AND SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL VERSES

Note : In the following pages, the authors and sources of the individual verses included in this Volume VI are documented. The minimum necessary information about the authors and sources are also provided. Where, however, such information has already been given in earlier Volumes, only references thereto, if necessary, are provided in this Volume. To this, is added a reference from A Descriptive Catalogue of Poets quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions (DCA), 2 vols., by Ludwik Sternbach (Otto Harrassowitz, Wiesbaden 1978–80), where details of anthological and inscriptional poets have been fully recorded; and are also added references from Catalogus Catalogorum (CC), 3 parts, by Th. Aufrecht (reprint edn. Wiesbaden 1962) and New Catalogus Catalogorum (NCC), several parts (still incomplete), by V. Raghavan, K. K. Raja, and others (Madras). For references to the texts used, see "Abbreviations-cum-Bibliography" given in the preceding pages (3019–94) of the present Volume (VI) as Appendix I.

At the end of each source are given the serial numbers of the verses appeared in the present Volume, being Nos. 9980–11491. The abbreviations used for the serveral authors and texts are given in italics, within brackets, following the relevant sources. While verse-numbers given as such refer to the sources from which the verses are directly extracted, verse-numbers given within brackets refer to the sources which are known indirectly.

AKBARĪYA-KĀLIDĀSA (AKABARĪYA-KĀ°) alias Govinda Bhaṭṭa. For details on him, see Vol. I, p. 319.

VIKRAMĀDITYA. By tradition, an epithet given to a king, perhaps a legendary one, who reigned over the land around Ujjayinī and conquered the Śaka-s. He started a new era known as Vikrama-Saṁvat in B. C. 57-58. According to Th. Aufrecht, probably he was contemporary with Mātṛgupta and Meṇṭha in the 6th century A. D. (RT 3. 474 ; 8. 3421). As several kings are known by the name Vikramāditya, it is impossible to identify the one quoted in Sanskrit anthologies. First mentioned in JS, an anthology compiled in A. D. 1258. For other details, see DCA, Vol. 2, nos. 1450-54. See also $CC_1$ 569.

APPENDIX IV

SUBJECT INDEX

Note : In the following pages, important words along with brief explanatory and contextual remarks, if necessary, are recorded in the Roman alphabetical order in a subject-wise arranged manner, as far as possible. These words are culled from the English translation of the Sanskrit verses included in the present Volume. As it is somewhat different from the mere index of words, for the purpose of reference to various kinds of animals, birds, creepers, plants, trees, etc., readers are requested to see them under their common respective categories, instead of in their individual names in the general alphabetical order.

FOREWORD

It was 1976. The All-India Oriental Conference was meeting at Dharwar. I was presiding over its Classical Sanskrit Section. The second volume of the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṅgraha had just come out. I referred to it in my Presidential Address and spoke of the entire project as 'monumental'.

Much water has flowed down the Yamunā since then. A good twenty-three years have sped by. The Mahāsubhāṣitasaṅgraha has come up to six volumes. The seventh one, which I have the pleasure to introduce herewith, is all set to appear in print shortly.

The Mahāsubhāṣitasaṅgraha project is the second big project after the famed Vedic Word-Concordance project undertaken by the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute, Hoshiarpur. Expected to run into twenty volumes, it has been making steady progress, thanks to the singleminded dedication of its editor Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair. He has been editing its Sanskrit text with necessary corrections and additions, providing text-comparative data, suggesting emendations in cases of doubtful readings, supplying notes on various matters including metres and compiling indices. He has also been translating a huge majority of the subhāṣitas into English, a task daunting enough in view of their laconic nature and the diffused construction at times.

While the scholarly community would expect the project to gather a little more of speed, it has also to come to terms and appreciate the constraints under which it is operating. When one single individual is to carry the major responsibility of supplementing, editing, translating, index-making and seeing the work through the Press, the progress cannot but be slow. It is a monument of wonder that so many volumes of the monumental Mahāsubhāṣitasaṅgraha could at all make their appearance. Scholarly community owes to Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair its profuse thanks.

A good statement, a wise saying is designated in Sanskrit by two terms : subhaṣita and sūkti. There is a vast number of them in Sanskrit literature. They figure in it in two forms : direct and indirect; direct in didactic works, the Nīti texts and in good measure in tales and fables; in indirect form in Anyoktis or in Arthāntaranyāsas, general statements in support of specific ones or as sequels, as a sum up as it were, to given situations. In both the forms they contain profound wisdom which, if properly digested, could provide useful guidance to people in all circumstances. Couched in beautiful picturesque expression, they form a source of real delight to connoisseurs who would take them tastier than even the grapes, the sugar and the nectar :

drākṣā mlānamukhī jātā śarkarā caśmatāṁ gatā /
subhāṣitarasasyāgre sudhā bhītā divaṁ gatā //

"The grapes have become listless, sugar has turned into flint, in the face of the taste of the subhāṣitas nectar has, out of fear, fled (lit., gone) to heaven".

Epitomizing cumulative pragmatic experience over centuries and millenia, the subhāṣitas provide a window to India's philosophy of life, the ideal and the practical. They thus provide an excellent material for socio-cultural study which, if undertaken in seriousness, could yield enormous dividends in divining the Indian mind over vast periods of time.

With a large number of them available, need was felt even fairly early to compile them into anthologies, an unending process coming down even to the present day. There are recent collections of them like the Saṁskṛtasūktiratnākara of Ramji Upadhyaya (1968), the Nītimuktāvali of Ravindra Kumar Seth and Devakanya Arya (1981), the Viśvasaṁskṛtasūktikośa, in three volumes, of Lalitaprabhasagara (1990), the Sūktiratnāvali of Kulamani Mishra (1991), the Subhāṣitasāhasrī of the writer of these lines (1998) along with an anonymous compiler's Kavīndravacanasamuccaya, the Subhāṣitāvali of Vallabhadeva, the Sūktimuktāvalī of Jalhaṇa, the Saduktikarṇāmṛta of Śrīdharadāsa, the Subhāṣitaratnakoṣa of Vidyākara and the Subhāṣitaratnabhāṇḍāgara of Nārāyaṇa Rāma Acārya of the past. Since none of the anthologies and the compendia were exhaustive enough to cover the entire Sanskrit literature, some important segments like the inscriptions having remained totally unnoticed; Prof. Ludwik Sternbach thought of compiling all the subhāṣitas in a work ransacking the entire available source material—the individual works in Sanskrit (Brahmanical, Jain and Buddhist) as also anthologies and compendia—for purposes of presenting a near complete collection of them : a mahāsaṅgraha in the real sense of the term. His is the biggest ever collection of the Sanskrit subhāṣitas.

Though every effort has been made by Prof. Sternbach and Prof. S. Bhaskaran Nair to trace them to some source, there may still be some; as indeed there are; which cannot be traced to any source. Existing in the form of floating material duly noticed by the ancients themselves as udbhaṭaślokas or sphuṭaślokas in the anthologies. Apart from those listed as such, there may still be thousands which are in circulation in traditional Sanskrit circles but which do not figure in any text, anthology or compilation. It is not uncommon to come across Paṇḍitas in India reeling them out at every conceivable opportunity to stress a point. My revered father Prof. Charu Deva Shastri had told me of an incident which I am tempted to recount here. When a college student at Jalandhar, he would spend summer vacations with his brothers at Ambala Cantt. A medical practitioner of the name of Milkhi Ram ran a clinic over there. He hailed from a town close to that of my father. A devout Arya Samajist, the medical practitioner found in my father a good companion. One day a beggar in tatters came to the clinic and begged of the practitioner a paisa, a penny. With no mind to encourage begging, he told him to recite a Vedic mantra. The beggar smiled and came out with a torrent of them much to the surprise of my father and the practitioner who enquired of him as to why he, a highly learned man, was going about begging a paltry amount. The beggar recited a stanza and walked away without accepting anything. The stanza was :

nirakṣare vīkṣya mahādhanatvaṁ
vidyā 'navadyā viduṣā na heyā |
ratnāvataṁsāḥ kulaṭāḥ samīkṣya
kim āryanāryaḥ kulaṭā bhavanti ? ||

"Seeing an unlettered man in affluence, a learned man should (in no way) give up his blemishless learning. Do noble women finding the unchaste ones wearing gem-studded ear-rings turn unchaste ?" All his life my father had been looking for the sources of the stanza. It must have been one of the udbhaṭa type mentioned above—a special feature of the Sanskrit tradition. These types of stanzas may not figure in any of the existing subhāṣitasaṅgrahas but may still be possible to be retrieved from the rich memory of the Sanskrit Paṇḍitas. Urgent steps to tap this source are a desideratum before it dries up.

The present volume, the seventh in the series, of the Mahāsubhāṣitasaṅgraha would enlarge the scope for the reader to the extent of 1528 subhāṣitas to pick and choose as of them as he may like and profit from. I have every hope that it too would meet with the same approbation of the reading public as have received the past six ones.

PREFACE

The Sanskrit Subhāṣita-s encompassing both the wise sayings of metrical composition and the entertaining verses of poetic fascination reveal the qualities of head and heart proudly possessed by the elite of India's splendid past. Almost every standard Sanskrit work contains the Subhāṣita-s in substantial numbers making the Sanskrit literature a rich repository of such genre of literature. From the very early period onward, scholarly efforts are being made to prepare the anthologies of these Subhāṣita-s popularly known as Subhāṣita-saṁgraha-s. The anonymous Kavīndra-vacana-samuccaya, Vallabhadeva's Subhāṣitāvali, Bhagadatta Jalhaṇa's Sūkti-muktāvalī, Śrīdharadāsa's Sadukti-karṇāmṛta, Vidyākara's Subhāṣita-ratna-koṣa and Sūryakaliṅgarāja's Sūkti-ratna-hāra are some of the important ancient Subhāṣita-saṁgraha-s, and amongst the modern ones, Narayana Rama Acharya's Subhāṣita-ratna-bhāṇḍāgāra and Otto Böhtlingk's Indische Sprüche with German translation deserve special mention. Worthwhile in their own way as all the previously prepared Subhāṣita-saṁgraha-s, particularly those cited above, were, there still remained a desideratum to have a comprehensive Subhāṣita-saṁgraha in consolidated form, which might include in its purview all the Subhāṣita-verses recorded in the earlier anthologies as also the new ones collected from the extant standard Sanskrit texts and all other possible sources. With a view to fulfilling this long-felt need, in the early sixties Dr. Ludwik Sternbach conceived the idea of preparing an extensive collection of the Subhāṣita-s, which, like his Cāṇakya-nīti-śākhā-sampradāyaḥ (Cāṇakya-nīti-text-tradition), was given the title by Acharya Dr. Vishva Bandhu, the Founder-Director of the V. V. R. Institute, as Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha. Thus the present project saw the light of the day.

The aim of the project is to put forward, in a systematic manner, the wit and wisdom of India's glorious bygone days as contained in the vast expanse of Sanskrit literature. With this end in view, in the preparation of the present work, an earnest endeavour has been made to collect, classify, edit critically with detailed references and text-comparative annotations, translate into English, arrange and present in the Devanāgarī alphabetical order the ethical, scientific and other delightful sayings couched in metrical form as available in India and also in 'Greater India' comprising the countries like Tibet, Sri Lanka, Burma, Thailand, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, etc. where Sanskrit literature along with Indian civilization and culture had spread in early times. Further a complete list of Bibliography and three indices, to wit, (1) Index of Authors and Sources, (Govt. of India) and D. Litt. (h. c., Bangkok); and the holder of several titles including Mahamahopadhyaya and Vidyavachaspati; who, being a prodigy of Sanskrit learning, excels both in the widely different spheres of critical scholarship and creative composition, for introducing the Volume to the world of scholars and cultured public by contributing an informative Foreword thereto. He is the most eminently suitable Sanskritist to perform this duty as he possesses the first-hand information about all concerning the project of the Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha.

Likewise, I am grateful to my scholar-friends Prof. Gyula Wojtilla of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest (Hungary) and Prof. Chr. Lindtner of the Institute of Oriental Philology, Kθbenhavns University, Copenhagen (Denmark) for their valuable suggestions enabling me to revise an Entry each of the Appendix I and the Appendix II, respectively. I also sincerely wish to express my infinite gratitude to the scholars for their appreciative and encouraging reviews of the Volume VI of the Mahā-Subhāṣita-Saṁgraha appeared in the research journals of repute, and prominent among them are Prof. Ludo Rocher of the University of Pennsylvania (U. S. A.); Prof. K. K. Raja of the Adyar Library and Research Centre, Madras; Prof. S. D. Laddu of the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona; Prof. D. K. Gupta of the Punjabi University, Patiala; Prof. Gyula Wojtilla of Budapest (Hungary); Dr. Sukumari Bhattacharji of Jadavpur University, Calcutta; Dr. Pierre-Sylvain Filliozat of Paris (France); and Dr. M. L. Wadekar of the Oriental Institute, M. S. University of Baroda, Vadodara.

And finally, I must thank Shri Indra Dutt Uniyal, Deputy Director-cum-Research Officer at the Institute, Dr. Trilochan Singh Bindra, Reader, Dept. of V. V. B. I. S. & I. S., Panjab University, Hoshiarpur and Dr. Parveen Singh Rana, Lecturer, Government College, Muktsar for their assistance and co-operation in the press-processing and the final presentation of the Volume.

Cupid has a bow, arrow and residence in the mind ; she [your beloved] too has her eyebrows (resembling bow), the corner [side-glance] of her eyes (resembling arrow) and residence in your mind. Thus equality exists in both ; O my lord, love her in such a way that she, who gets emaciated by love for you, does not become bodiless (as in the case of Cupid). (S. B. Nair).

[1]Under a pretext, a shrewd gallant touched the hot boiled rice and looked at the cold white sugar by turns. (On observing this), the clever maid put her finger on her reddish lower lip as if she were wondering at the thought of this impropriety (on the part of her lover)[2]. (S. B. Nair).

1. Considering this verse as a variant of Naiṣ 16. 78, K. K. Handiqui did not translate it.

2. While the hot boiled rice and the cold white sugar indicate the day and the night, respectively, the reddish lower lip represents the evening glow. Thus, a certain lover asked his beloved maid whether the day or the night was suitable for love-play. The maid rejecting both the day and the night suggested the evening twilight as the right time (cf. Naiṣ 16. 78).

The women of the Triple City wept from lotus-eyes / as Śambhu's arrow-flame embraced them; / but still, though shaken off, the fire caught their hands, / though struck, did pluck their garments' hem,/ denied, it seized their hair, and scorned/ like lover who has lately loved another, lay before their feet. / May this same fire burn away your sins.[1] (D. H. H. Ingalls).

1. Ch. R. Devadhar translates the verse :
May the fire of Śiva's dart scorch away your sins : the fire which was treated like a lover, caught in fresh iniquity, by the young wives of Tripura ; as they reviled it, it clung to their hands ; although they struck it with forces, it still seized the hems of their garments ; as it seized them by the hair, they knocked it away from them ; as it fell down at their feet, they did not observe it in their bewilderment, and as it lapped them in an embrace, they repelled it with tears in their lotus-like eyes.

By the sacred tradition the woman is declared to be the soil, the man is declared to be the seed ; the production of all corporeal beings (takes place) through the union of the soil with the seed.

In some cases the seed is more distinguished, and in some the womb of the female ; but when both are equal, the offspring is most highly esteemed.

On comparing the seed and the receptacle (of the seed), the seed is declared to be more important ; for, the offspring of all created beings is marked by the characteristics of the seed.

Whatever (kind of) seed is sown in a field, prepared in due season, (a plant) of that same kind, marked with the peculiar qualities of the seed, springs up in it.

This earth, indeed, is called the primeval womb of created beings ; but the seed develops not in its development any properties of the womb.

In this world seeds of different kinds, sown at the proper time in the land, even in one field, come forth (each) according to its kind. (G. Bühler).

When serving my evil and cruel masters I have somehow borne their harsh words with great patience, kept the natural rush of tears forcibly imprisoned within the eyes, thoughtlessly assumed a laughing countenance, and subduing all mental agitation bowed myself with clasped palms before the haughty persons of those senseless fellows who had scornfully laughed at my poverty. But what more disgraceful acts wilst thou, oh fruitless greed, still compel me to do, I cannot precisely say ? (P. G. Nath).

(b) त्वचं तारवीम् VS (but VS [var.] as above).

Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre.

Residing in a hermitage on the banks of the Gaṅgā, emaciated by austerities, with peace of mind, cooking a handful of wild grains for food, wearing the sacred deer-skin, laying on a bed of Darbha-grass, praying constantly to Lord Śiva, and bathed in holy ashes, when will my mind attain beatitude. (S. B. Nair).

Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre.

These hypocrites carry off the wealth of the rich; they repair to the banks of the Ganges, and placing a stone amidst its cold waves, seat themselves proudly, holding in their hands the sacred grass, with the Karaṇḍojjvala[1] at their side, and they show the suppleness of their fingers in twirling the rudrākṣa beads of their rosary. (J. Taylor).

1. A box or wicker-basket in which the family God is kept.

Sragdharā metre.

Granting [selling] the damsel of liberation in the shop of the pure grounds on the banks of the Gaṅgā in the city of Kāśikā [Banaras], which is the main place for the people to give up their bodies, holding the hand of the Goddess Pārvatī, the Ancient God is in company with his sons the elephant-faced Gaṇeśa and the six-faced Kumāra ; may this Lord Śiva, the lotus-eyed one, whose greatness is immeasurable protect us all from all great dangers ! (S. B. Nair).
